Studied semester

A studied semester is a semester during which a student attends courses for more days than a half of the semester’s duration (more than 70 days) and during which the student is on academic leave and/or extended standard period of study for less than a half of the semester. If a student is on academic leave and/or extended standard period of study for more than a half of the semester (more than 70 days), the semester is not considered a studied semester. When calculating this 70-day period, all weekdays are taken into account, not just working days.
